[*]The h-index quantifies both the scientific productivity and the scientific impact of a scientist. Specifically, h = 40 means that 40 of my publications have been cited at least 40 times. In this way, the h-index reflects both the number of my publications and the number of citations per publication. The index is biased against smaller scientific fields and should not be used for comparing scientists, particularly not for those who work in different domains as citation conventions differ widely among different fields. The i-10-index refers to the number of my publications with at least 10 citations. The current statistics were calculated in June 2015 using Google Scholar Citations.
